

Soviet Russia To Limit Clothing Worn

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6.—One pair of shoes and one suit of clothes for each person is the maximum to be allowed by the soviet government in Petrograd, according to plans reported by the state department through official channels in Finland. The scheme of limiting the amount of clothing civilians might possess was said to be one of the measures to be adopted to obtain supplies for the red army.

Night searches of the dwellings of officers and their families began on September 30. Surplus clothes, food and other supplies being confiscated, the report said. Workmen insisted that homes of officers and commissars be searched before supplies of the civilian population were touched.

Rise.—Full RIVER FORECAST. The Mississippi river will not change much at Helena during the next two days, but it will fall slightly at Memphis.

According to the United States weather bureau, the river is at the lowest stage since the break of last spring. There is very little change expected in the river at this point for the next several days.

The steamer Idlewild returned Tuesday afternoon from her regular trip to St. Paul Landing, but remained in port all of Wednesday.

Government steamboat inspectors made an inspection of the steamer Empire Tuesday prior to her departure for Ashport.

The Harry Lee is scheduled to make this port Thursday from Helena and Friar Point with a heavy cargo of cotton.

The Kate Adams will arrive in port Thursday from Goodale, Helena and Friar Point, but will clear in the afternoon for the same points with a cargo of freight.

A delay has been encountered in the arrival of the Dixie, billed for the Memphis-Cynthiana trade. She was due here this week from New Orleans and will probably arrive before the last of the week.
